FOREWORD

From a young age Marie Marquet, the founder of MiniMe Paris, has loved creating accessories and clothing. As an adult, she is still a child fascinated by fairy tales, the imaginary, and pop surrealism. She studied at the Ecole de la Chambre Syndical de la Couture Parisienne, and has worked at several “Grandes Maisons” including Hermes, Balmain and Chanel.

In 2014, she won a young talent competition with a photography session of her hair accessories and hats as the prize. This photography session birthed the book which later became the portfolio which has continued to inspire us each season. Soon after, Marie presented the concept of the brand “MiniMe” to the managers of the Première Classe trade show. Seduced and enchanted, they proposed that Marie should present her collection with a brand concept at their September show.

The adventure begins! All summer she worked to produce the collection and refine the brand’s image and concept.

In September 2014, MiniMe was presented for the first time at Première Classe. The brand developed quickly and in its second season launched a line of ready-to-wear and subsequently established a Parisian atelier “La Maison de MiniMe” (“The House of MiniMe”).

In 2016 she won the Designer’s Apartment Contest organized by La Fédération Francaise du Prêt à Porter.

Today MiniMe Paris accessories and clothing are sold in shops around the world!

This season we are excited to unveil three exclusive collaborations: MiniMe Paris & Ancestral Ground; MiniMe Paris & Béton Ciré; and MiniMe Paris & Nicolas Messina!

The world’s most marvelous MiniMe Circus is proud to present to you an amazing and awe-inspiring collection that will delight the eyes and senses with vivid colors and clever punning. Tigers! Koi! Goldfish! Gaze upon our menagerie of beautiful ukiyo-e influenced beasts and caper with colorful hand-painted disco inspired prints.

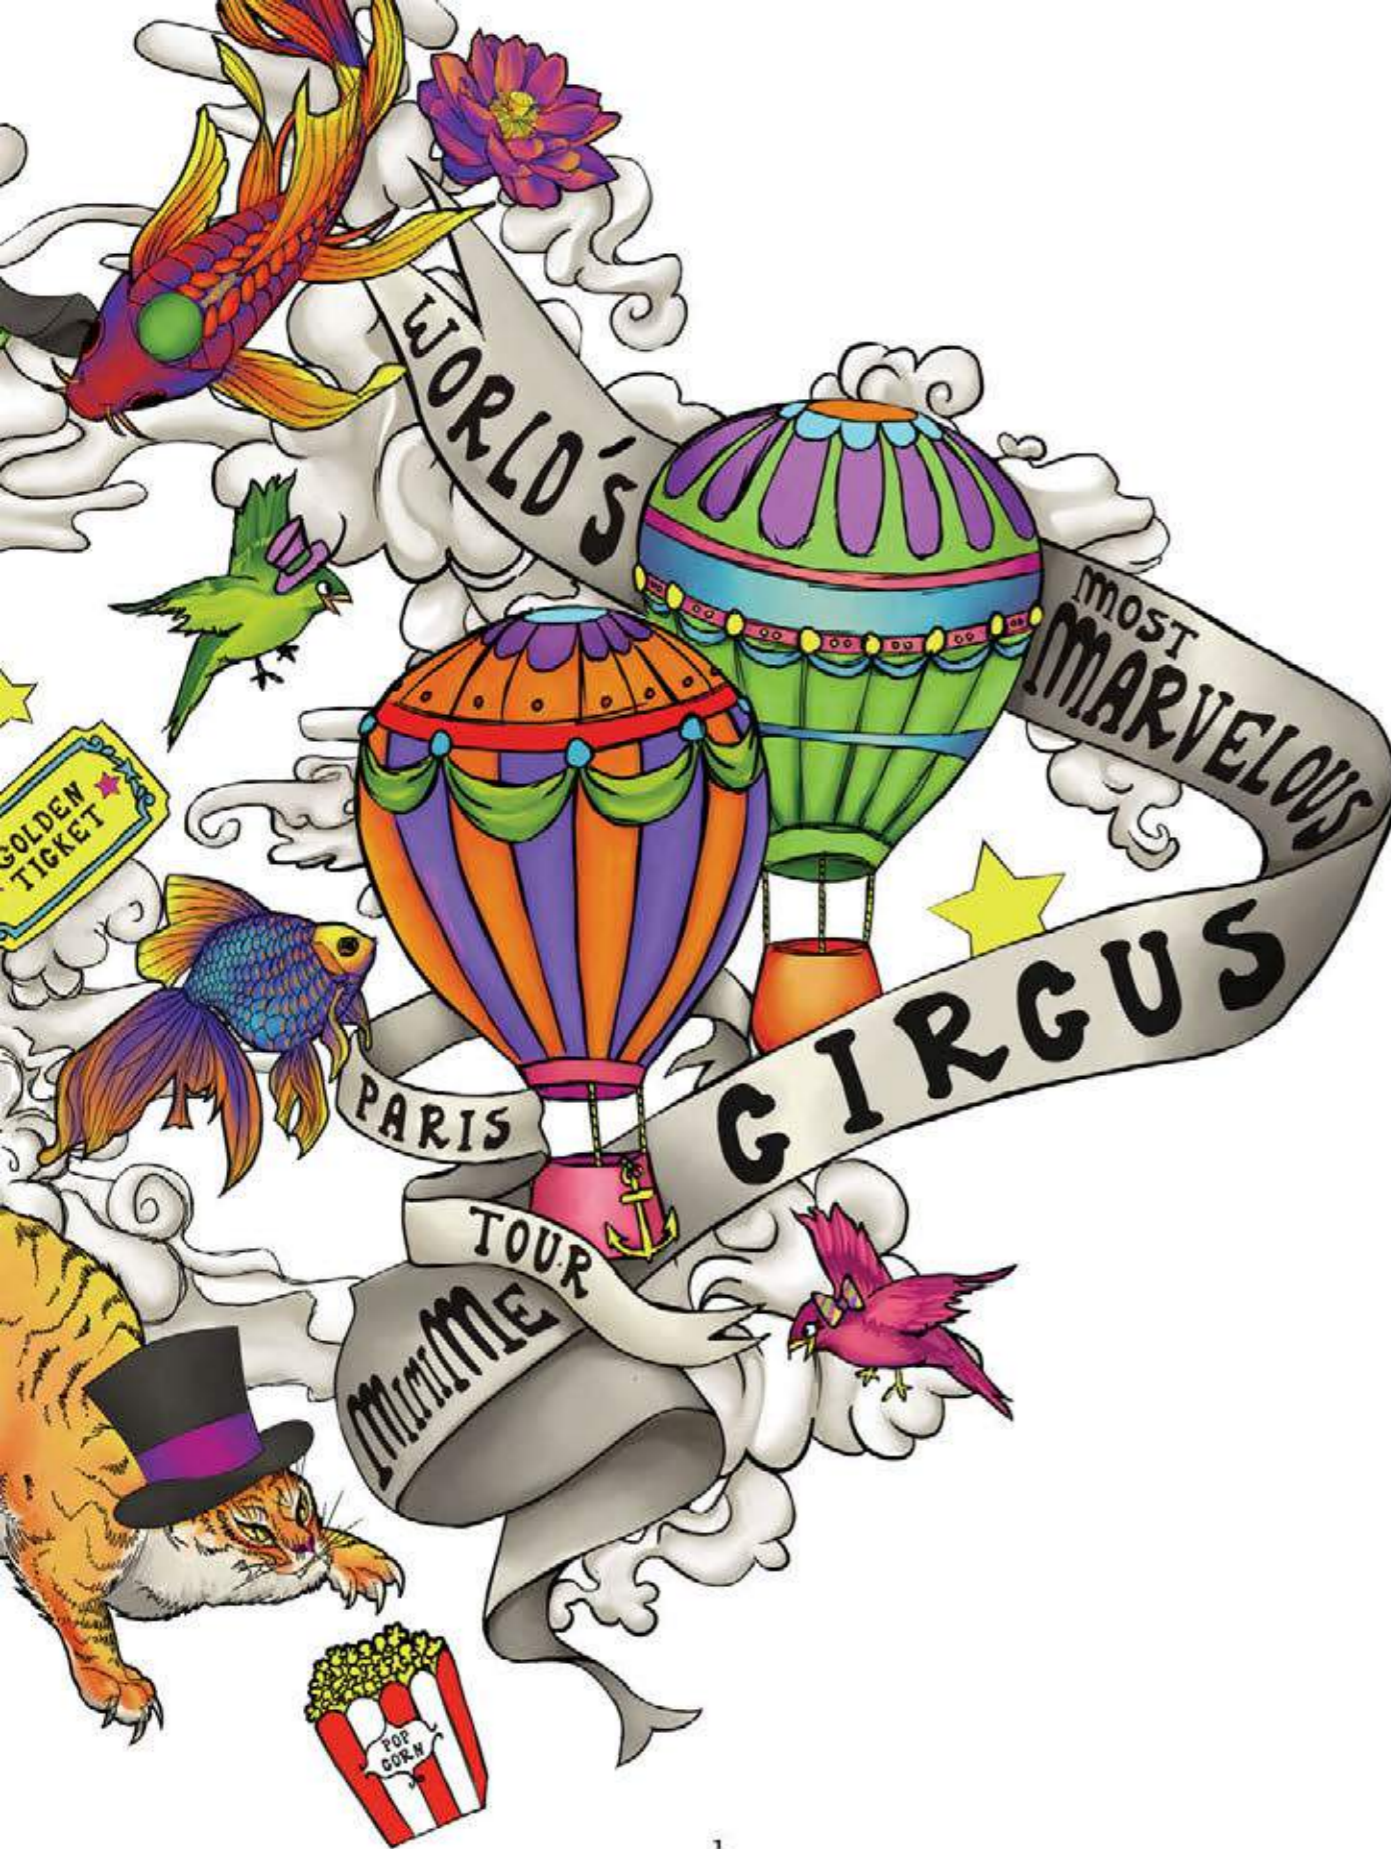

WOMEN'S COLLECTION

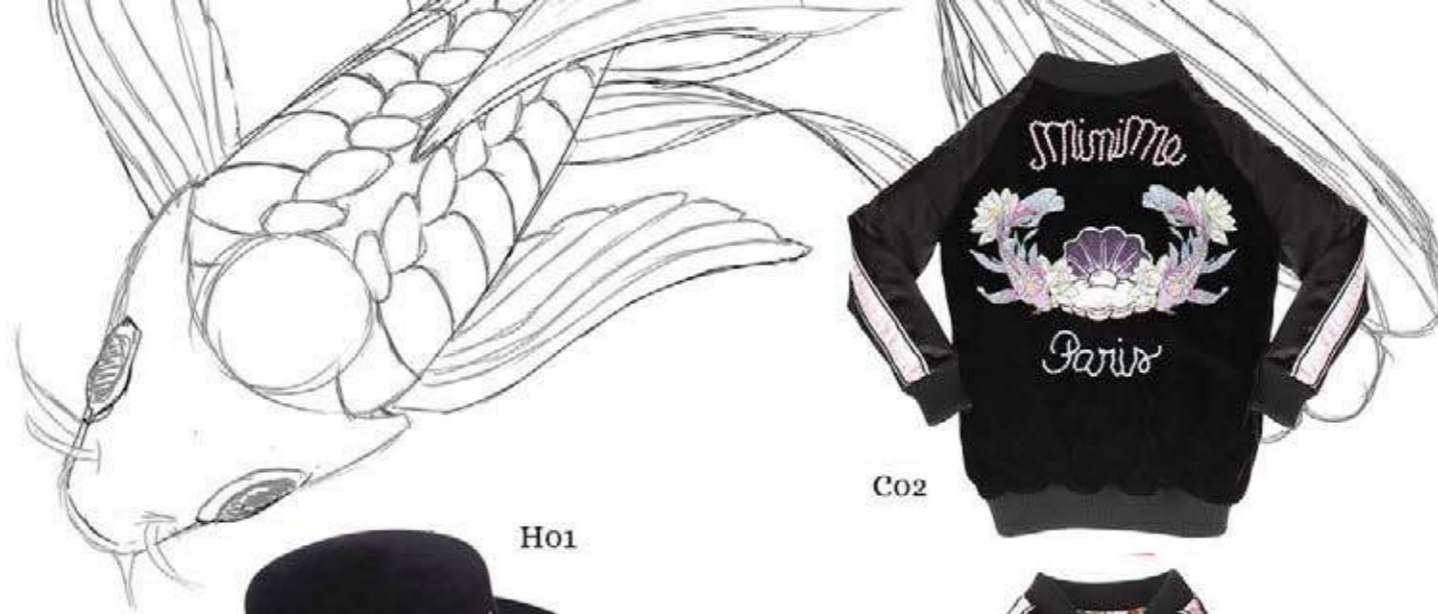

Chapter 1: The Circus

“Step right up, fly right down, or twirl right into the world’s most marvelous MiniMe Circus!” whistled the breeze.

Alice was enjoying her afternoon, as had been her habit recently, gazing down upon the world from her hot air balloon. The voice spoke again; Alice twisted around, but saw no one. On the ground, what had initially appeared to be a clump of extremely plump red striped toadstools grew larger, and larger, and LARGER... and the voice grew louder, and louder, and LOUDER... to the point where she could almost make out its words... when finally Alice realized that that, whatever it is, was the source of the now silent voice. She had since revised her opinion of toadstools to a very-large-someone’s unfolded laundry. Maybe, like her, they had changed size suddenly and were trapped in their clothing! Ah, wait—no, that can’t be right—could it? She decided to find out.

As Alice landed her balloon, acrobats somersaulted through the air, splashing her playfully with water from their fins and tails; a tiger leapt through the gap between her head and the balloon; a clown stared forlornly into her soul; and someone’s popcorn caught in the breeze and showered over the spectators. She felt overwhelmed, as if she had flown into a wedding, or a swarm of gnats of unusual size. It was a circus.

Chapter 3: The Caucus-Race

But rather than packing up and going home, which would have been boring—and no one in the circus was boring—they decided to hold a Caucus-Race. As everyone knows, movement not only warms one up, but also allows water to dry more quickly, so everyone heartily agreed upon the idea. Around Alice the animals donned their uniforms; 1 for the Ringmaster; 3 for the acrobats; 8 for the clown; 9 for the tiger; and so on... leaving Alice with a numberless shirt labeled “Tiger Softball.” It was decided a winner would be agreed upon by the contestants as the contestants swam in circles around the Big Top. Unfortunately, it was at this point that Alice realized she never had, and thus did not know how to swim. Fortunately the tiger noticed and allowed her to ride upon his back. While the purpose of the exercise had been to dry oneself, the only one actually becoming drier was Alice (as she was for the most part above the water).

The fish of course had the greatest advantage, and in the end everyone was declared a winner. While it did not do much in the way of drying off for anyone other than Alice, the contestants were mollified in each receiving a prize (pieces of soggy popcorn which had previously affixed themselves to Alice’s hair, but which by this point had become mostly dry and were beginning to fall into the water) at Alice’s expense. The Ringmaster insisted Alice herself must also receive a prize, so she took a piece of almost dry popcorn from her hair and handed it to him, which he immediately awarded upon her. Alice climbed from the tiger’s back into the hot air balloon, which had fortunately stayed afloat throughout the rain. After ushering the other animals aboard, the tiger jumped in himself and they set out in search of dry land.
